

AMERICAN ENGLISH AT STATE

Idiom of the Week

a person who holds an office but has little real influence because he or she has not been re-elected

LAME DUCK

The board of directors chose a new chairman to take over running the company. The old chairman had a few weeks left before he had to step aside, but his workers no longer feared him because he was a lame duck.